In acute and chronic heart failure, the cardioselective calcium antagonist diltiazem was administered for the treatment of acute exacerbations, and for chronic therapy of angina pectoris and chronic heart failure. In acute exacerbation of heart failure, the patients received diltiazem 5-10 mg/day in three divided doses after a short washout period. The patients were followed for 1 month after administration. In chronic therapy of heart failure, the patients received diltiazem 200-300 mg/day after a short washout period. The patients were followed for 4-6 weeks and then the dose was reduced to 100-200 mg/day over the next 6-8 weeks. During the acute treatment with diltiazem, patients experienced no adverse effects except for headache in 6 of 50 (12%) patients. The efficacy of diltiazem was evaluated by the frequency of angina attacks and the improvement of exercise tolerance. The frequency of angina attacks decreased significantly from 14/21 to 6/21 (p less than 0.05) and the exercise tolerance increased from 2.2 +/- 0.2 METs to 2
